THE STRUCTURE OF WORLD COTTON TRADE

The structure of world cotton trade is changing and 2009 was marked by a financial stress experienced by a number of cotton merchants as a result of extreme volatility in the cotton futures market in March 2008, the credit crisis causing banks to tighten lending to traders and the economic recession that curbed demand for cotton. As a result, many merchants incurred substantial losses, and several major cotton firms were forced into bankruptcy, merger or to go out of business. These events led to an increase in market concentration, but it has also opened doors for newcomers, mostly multi-commodity traders, to enter into the cotton business. Other consequences of the rise in speculative activities at the Intercontinental Exchange (ICE) in New York during the past two years and of tighter credit include damaged hedging capacities and price discovery functions at the futures exchange.

It was announced this year that Allenberg Cotton Company, the world's largest cotton merchant, is acquiring Dunavant Enterprises, also one of the largest merchants. Allenberg is owned by Louis Dreyfus Commodities, a major international merchant in many commodities. Allenberg cotton was founded in 1921 and was acquired by Louis Dreyfus in 1983. Allenberg has offices across the cotton belt in the U.S and offices in 9 other countries. China, Asia and the Western Hemisphere are major areas where Allenberg's operations have been expanding. Dunavant was founded in 1929 and is one of the largest privately owned cotton-merchandising companies in the world. Dunavant is involved in ginning and warehousing. Dunavant has large operations in Central Asia, South America, Africa and Australia. The firm has offices in the major cotton producing areas of the U.S. and in 13 other countries.

At the start of 2009, Albrecht, Mueller-Pearse & Co, based in Germany, filed for insolvency. Albrecht, Muller-Pearse and Co. was one of the largest European merchants. The firm was founded in 1902 and had two affiliates and an office in Hong Kong. The company traded Central Asian, West African, South American, African, U.S. and other growths worldwide.

Earlier in 2008/09, Paul Reinhart based in Dallas, Texas filed for bankruptcy protection. Paul Reinhart America is a subsidiary of Paul Reinhart AG of Switzerland, which continues operations and remains among the largest traders in Europe and in the world. However, after closing U.S. operations, Paul Reinhart in Switzerland handles approximately half of volumes traded prior to 2008. Paul Reinhart was founded in 1788 and started U.S. operations in 1992, becoming the world's largest cotton merchant not headquartered in the USA during the past decade.

Weil Brothers Cotton, another company among the group of the world largest merchants, announced in November 2008 that it is exiting the cotton business in 2010, as a result of the March 2008 market events and because risks associated with cotton trade have become greater. Weil Brothers Cotton was founded in 1878, is based in Montgomery, Alabama and is affiliated with Weil Brothers & Stern in Liverpool.

Based on estimated volumes traded by the largest and large companies during 2009, it is evident that volumes traded by these groups of companies were declining during the past two years as a result of the crises in the cotton industry, and declining production and consumption. The 2009 study indicates that the cotton shipping industry still remains highly competitive, but that it has become more concentrated over the past several years, as the number of major companies engaged in cotton trade declined.

The Secretariat has studied the structure of world trade in cotton since 1994 and compiles a list of cotton-trading companies active as of the end of each year. Most of the firms are members of the 18 associations comprising the Committee for International Cooperation between Cotton Associations (CICCA). The latest list was compiled from nine annual surveys mailed to all members of CICCA, from industry publications and personal knowledge. The total number of responding companies from the nine surveys is 107. The list of cotton trading companies consists of 452 firms engaged, at least in part, in international trade in cotton. Companies are divided into four categories by relative size. Organizations are also grouped by type of ownership: government, cooperative or private. The latest list of cotton trading organizations consists of 24 government organizations, 9 cooperatives and 419 private firms.

Largest

The most recent estimates of the volume traded by the largest companies in 2009 indicate that there are currently 13 companies with annual volume of more than 200,000 tons. The group of largest companies includes 4 government organizations. The largest group trades in 2009 6.2 million tons, or 26% of world production. 9 privately owned largest cotton trading organizations handled 5.2 million tons in 2009, or 22% of world production. In 2008, there were 15 companies in the largest category, handling 7 million tons, or 27% of world production, including 11 private companies handling 5.9 million tons, or 25% of world production. In 2009, five of the world's largest cotton trading companies were based in the USA, three in Uzbekistan, and one each in Japan, China, Singapore, Switzerland and the UK. Uzprommashimpeks, one of the three government agencies from Uzbekistan was added to the list of firms reported by the ICA (International Cotton Association) to have failed to fulfill awards resulting from arbitrations conducted by CICA member associations in December 2008.

The first study conducted in 1994 indicated that the 19 largest cotton organizations handled 6.8 million tons, or 36% of world production. 14 of the largest organizations were private or cooperative cotton companies, accounting for an estimated 5.5 million tons, or 29% of world cotton production. The conclusions of the study were that the world cotton industry was not highly concentrated by the standards of industrial markets and that the international cotton shipping industry was highly competitive. Since 1994, some departures and additions to the group of the largest cotton trading organizations have taken place, and it is obvious that some concentration has occurred.

As a sign of market concentration, a smaller number of the largest firms handle approximately the same volume in total as in 1994. However, reduced imports by China, declining mill use and production during the past two years led to reduced volumes handled by the largest companies, compared with records set in 2006/07.

Large

A significant reduction in the number of merchants during 2009 took place in the group of large companies (annual volume: 50,000 tons to 200,000 tons). It is estimated that the number of large companies declined from 44 merchants active in 2008 to 37 merchants trading cotton in 2009. The volume handled by the current group of large companies declined sharply from 4.4 million tons in 2008 to an estimated at 3.2 million tons in 2009, accounting for 13% of world production (17% in 2008). Compared with 2007, the volume traded by large companies in 2009 declined by 1.5 million tons. The composition of organizations defined as large companies has changed the most since 1994. The number of large government organizations declined from 15 to 3 as a result of privatization, mostly in Africa. The 1994 study indicated that there were 51 large cotton-trading companies handling 4.1 million tons, including 35 non-government owned large organizations accounting for 2.5 million tons, or 13% of world production. As of 2009, 34 private large companies are accounting for 3 million tons, or 12% of world production. The 43 largest and large non-government cotton trading companies account for 43% of world production in 2009, compared with 42% handled by 49 firms in the same categories in 1994.

Thirteen of the 37 large cotton traders are based in the USA. Four large firms are based in India; four in Switzerland and two in the UK.

Among the most noticeable changes in the group is the recent entrance of a large commodity trader, Noble Resources Group, into cotton. Noble Cotton is headquartered in Singapore with regional offices in India, USA, Brazil, China, Uzbekistan, Australia, Turkey and Cote d'Ivoire. Noble Cotton is expanding operations in China, India, Brazil, Uzbekistan, USA and West Africa.

Another entry into the group is the recent formation of the Dubai Cotton Centre (DCC) in Dubai, UAE for the purpose of establishing a trading infrastructure for facilitating exports of Uzbek cotton. The DCC is owned by the government organization, Dubai Multi Commodities Centre (DMCC), and is working to provide services to the cotton supply chain, including storage, handling, shipping and merchandizing.

Multigrain S.A. based in Sao Paulo, Brazil, a multicommodity trader, entered into cotton trade about three years ago and has grown in cotton volumes traded to the size of a large trader. The firm has an affiliate in the USA. The company was founded in 1999 and now has the largest volumes of operations in grains and soybeans.

With increased production, mill use and exports in India a number of Indian merchants became more active internationally, entering other markets, such as China, opening offices in other countries and trading a variety of growths directly to mills.

Medium

There are currently 51 firms in the medium category (annual volume: 20,000 tons to 50,000 tons), five more than in 2008, with an estimated volume of 1.3 million tons. The volume traded by medium sized companies has not changed significantly during the past year. The number of medium sized companies increased as several of the larger companies had to reduce traded volumes as a result of the mentioned crises and smaller supply and demand. In 1994, there were 50 medium companies with approximately the same combined volume. Among the 51 medium sized companies, 8 are based in the USA, 4 in Turkey and 3 in Switzerland.

Specialized

The most recent survey includes 351 firms in the category of specialized companies accounting for 1.7 million tons of combined volume in 2009, little changed over the past 9 years. A very large number of specialized cotton trading companies are based in the USA, Turkey, Poland, India, Switzerland, Germany, Egypt, Brazil and Italy. Several European companies went out of business during this decade.
